

GLOBAL CAPABILITY CENTER

GCC's

Global Capability Centers (GCCs), are offshore facilities set up by businesses to offer an array of services to their parent companies. Within the global corporate structure, these centers function as internal organizations that offer specialized services like IT support, customer service, research and development, and other business tasks. GCCs and GICs are critical in leveraging cost efficiencies, and accessing talent pools.

Establishing Global Capability Centers, which go beyond the conventional low maturity Captive Centers/ Global In-house Center (GIC) models, has proven to be extremely valuable for top global organizations looking to access top talent and international markets.

KEY POINTS TO SET UP GCC

Location

GCCs are frequently placed strategically in areas that provide a number of advantages, such as a robust pool of talent, an advantageous business climate, and cost considerations. This location may be in a separate geographic area or the same nation as the parent organization.

Infrastructure

The office space, technology infrastructure, and other facilities needed to support their operations are usually owned by GCCs. The center's infrastructure is tailored to the particular requirements of the activities and tasks that are being performed there.

Legal Entity

GCC has a separate legal identity at its place of business as per the local laws. Although GCCs operate independently, they are closely affiliated with the parent organization. To guarantee alignment with the organization's overarching strategic goals, the GCC and the headquarters maintain constant cooperation and communication.

Global Network

A vast array of multinational companies run several GCCs in various parts of the world, forming a worldwide network of capacities. Through this network, businesses can take advantage of time zone advantages, access a wide pool of talent, and strategically place themselves in important markets.
